

Taylor Dewey is a foreign service officer with the State Department. He is currently assigned in the Office of the Secretary, and he has served overseas, on Capitol Hill, in the Pentagon, Intelligence Community, and the White House Situation Room. He is a Captain in the Navy reserves, currently Commanding Officer of Navy Reserve U.S. Forces Korea. He is a Surface Warfare Officer and has led six other units. He has a BA from Cornell in Government, MAs from Stanford in International Policy Studies (concentration in security cooperation) and the Naval War College in National Security and Strategic Studies, and he is a doctoral candidate at Missouri State University in Defense and Security Studies. He speaks six foreign languages to varying degrees of proficiency. Taylor has experience with security cooperation – he was the Operations Officer at the Security Cooperation Office (MILGRP) in Honduras, and OIC of JIATF-W’s International Maritime Security Training Team, which was awarded the SECDEF’s Security Forces Assistance Award. He has held numerous academic fellowships and been affiliated with the CFR, CNAS, and IISS think tanks. Military decorations include Defense Meritorious Service Medal, Meritorious Service Medal, Joint and Navy Commendation Medals, Joint, Navy, and Army Achievement Medals. He is also the recipient of State Department Superior and Meritorious Honor Awards. He lives in Alexandria, VA.